

Virtual Author Visits

Problem: Due to a pesky pandemic, teachers can't invite authors into their classrooms

Solution: Virtual author visits!

Author visits are a great literacy booster! As a former teacher, I love to get back out into classrooms to connect with my readers. But since we're living in an unprecedented reality, we need to be creative. Video author visits (via Zoom, Google Meet, Duo, etc.) are a great solution. These always create plenty of excitement around writing and reading, and can be a highly effective teaching tool.

Options:

- Standard Author Visit (40-minutes): I read from Space Cadets, take students' questions and ask a few of my own. We always have lots of great discussion about writing and reading!*
 - *Teachers often prep their students in advance, leading to questioning related to what's been happening in recent Language Arts classes.
- I offer 2 different story-writing workshops:
 - "The Story Planner": 3 lessons (30 minutes each, spread over 3 days).
 - Session 1: I tell your students a story, then show them the sheet I used to plan it
 - Sessions 2 & 3: We plan a story together
 - Afterwards, each of your students is ready to write their own story. At the same time, I'll write my version of the story, and post it on my website.
 - "What Could Go Wrong?": 3 lessons (30 minutes each, spread over 3 days).
 - By the end, your students will have a story outline ready to go, along with the experience of having walked through a foolproof method for generating great story ideas.
- A specific session related to a particular writing outcome as requested by the teacher (ideal for reinforcing concepts developed by you in class)
- Several mentoring sessions spread out over the school year, providing opportunities to discuss students' questions, struggles and successes with their writing. The possibilities are almost endless, and customized for each class at the direction of the teacher.

Fees:

As an independently-published author, I try to balance my need for a minimal income to support my writing habit 😊 with a former teacher's awareness of the meagreness of school budgets.

- Standard author visit
 - $50 for 40 minutes (but FREE for any teacher going through Space Cadets as a read aloud with their students)
